SUZY AD

DIRECTOR'S NOTE

You can look at Into the Woods in two ways. It can be an epic fractured fairytale in which you could leave at intermission and feel completely justified that you got your money's worth. Or, you can see it as a metaphor for real, human life, in which you have to stay through the end to really understand it. That's life, though, isn't it? Sticking through it? Getting through the woods? I think it is. Fortunately, in a show as beautifully written as this, getting through the woods is what the magic is all about. And seeing choices leading to consequences leading to more choices leading to more consequences....well, that's life!

George Bernard Shaw said that "life is not about finding yourself. It's about creating yourself." The woods, in this play, are a place where characters might have gone to sell a cow, deliver some pastries, or get a child, but they come out different people altogether.

They're wiser, they're stronger, and they're a little sadder, too. Anything can happen in the woods, and anything does. As we watch these characters recreate themselves in response to that, I'm sure we might see some similarities in our own lives. How are we dealing with what life throws at us? How does it change us? And how are we recreating who we are?

I'm grateful for the production team at Hale for all of their beautiful work on this production. They are truly a caring and committed team. I'm also grateful for a collaborative and creative directing team and a cast that was a dream to work with. They didn't find their characters, they created an ensemble. I couldn't ask for anything better. Enjoy the show!

EMILY DABCZYNSKI

Witch (M-S)

Emily is thrilled to be a part of this talented cast and to (finally!) perform again with her favorite siblings. "Endless love and thank-yous to the very best family, the truest friends, the loyalest cats and the sweetest AFS, for never leaving me halfway through the woods." # ABOUT THE SHOW

1 In a year dominated by The Phantom of the Opera on Broadway, Into the Woods won several important Tony awards, including Best Score, Best Book, and Best Actress in a Musical (for Joanna Gleason as the Baker's Wife).

2 The Beast of Gévaudan was a wolf that terrorized a province in southern France between 1764 and 1767. Scholars estimate that the wolf killed between 60 and 100 adults and children, and it got to the point where the French government sent in the army to kill it. The attacks stopped after a local hunter finally shot the wolf.

3 Fairy tales don't have a single standard form; many different versions exist for each story. In some versions of Little Red Ridinghood, no one rescues her from being eaten by the wolf. In some versions of "Cinderella", it is her stepfather that treats her badly.

4 The earliest version of Into the Woods featured a cameo appearance by the Three Little Pigs. Though they don't appear in this production, they have popped up in various revivals of the show since then.

5 The Rapunzel story perhaps comes from the 10th-century epic The Shahnama, a central part of Persian culture. In the story, the princess Rudaba of Kabul lets Zal (a hero in the tale) use her hair as a rope to climb up onto the roof of the palace with her. Some even claim that the word "Rapunzel" is a combination of the names of the characters "Rubada" and "Zal!"

6 Probably the most famous "witch" in European history, Mother Shipton was an English soothsayer and prophetess whose writings have been claimed to predict the defeat of the Spanish Armada, the Great Fire of London, and even the Internet. However, the first version of her prophecies appeared eighty years after her death, and some later editions are admitted fakes.

7 The famous cry of the giant in "Jack and the Beanstalk", "Fee! Fie! Foe! Fum! I smell the blood of an Englishman!" appears in William Shakespeare's King Lear centuries before any written version of the fairy tale.

8 Though the famous slipper in the Cinderella story is gold in Into the Woods and glass in Disney's renditions of the fairy tale, other versions give even more variations: an anklet, a ring, a bracelet, or even a fur slipper have been what led the Prince to Cinderella.
